My dear Charan Singh,

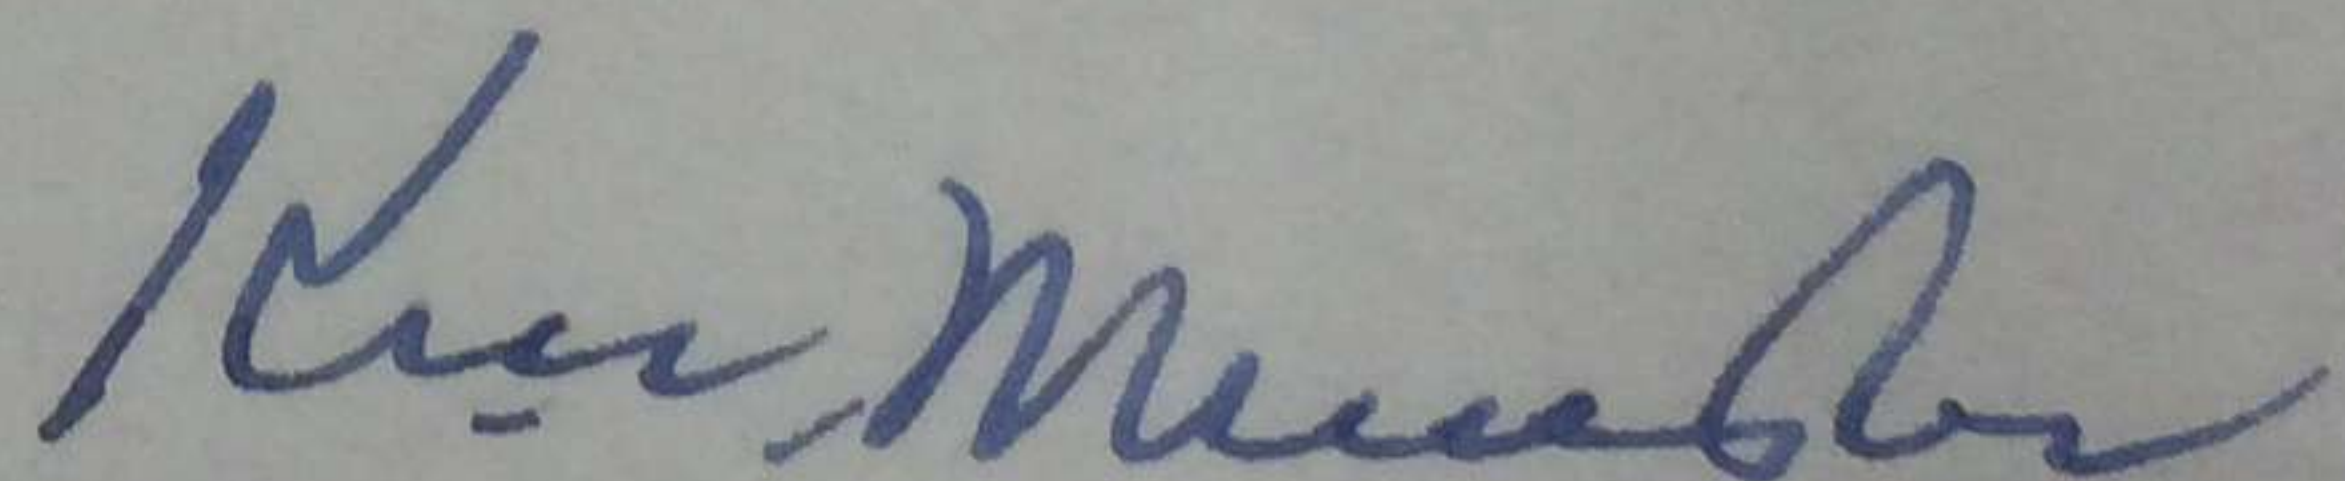

I had been all over India, going to Puri for the Sanskrit Vishwa Parishad, to Calcutta and then back to Delhi. I could not therefore reply to your letters in detail.

It seems your fate will soon be decided and you will be a free man.

I read your book with absorbing interest. My only complaint is that it does not seem to be printed very well. If you had told me, the Bhavan would have taken it up and assured of a very good circulation. Anyway, whenever you feel like it, for another edition, let me know if I can be of any help.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

(K.M. Munshi)

This significant and most controversial of themes is thoroughly discussed here by one who is specially qualified for the task. Shri Charan Singh is generally regarded as an outstanding authority on the subject. It was he who had marshalled a formidable case against Joint or Co-Operative Farming at Nagpur.

But the author does not indulge in any polemics here. His treatment is balanced and objective, based on a life-time of study and observation. Having ample mastery of all essential background material, he presents his thesis, supported by tables and statistics, with clarity of expression and sober, constructive reasoning.

In fine, the author has endeavoured to place before his readers a positive, integrated picture of our age-old agrarian and socio-economic problems and the ways and means of solving them effectively. Anyone interested in a proper evaluation of this burning topic of the day will find this comprehensive and authoritative study to be quite rewarding reading.
